Carving Out the Commons develops a theory of the urban commons through an investigation of limited-equity housing cooperatives in Washington, DC. In the mid-1970s in the US, waves of gentrification led to the displacement of lower-income residents who were unable to afford rising rental prices, and who were evicted to make room for new developments.

In Carving Out the Commons, Amanda Huron theorizes the practice of urban “commoning” through a close investigation of the city’s limited-equity housing cooperatives. Drawing on feminist and anticapitalist perspectives, Huron asks whether a commons can work in a city where land and other resources are scarce and how strangers who may not share a past or future come together to create and maintain commonly held spaces in the midst of capitalism.

Amanda Huron's new book, Carving Out the Commons, focuses on ten LECs formed during the first wave of gentrification in Washington, D.C., and considers their history and future as urban commons. A geographer and urban planner who teaches social sciences at the University of the District of Columbia, Huron demonstrates how tenants resisted eviction and built their political power to reclaim housing from capitalists.
