growth in one skill inevitably leads to growth in the other (i.e., students become better readers by strengthening their writing skills and vice-versa).

~~The Reading Writing Connection~~

The relationship between language by eye (reading) and language by hand (writing) has been recognized and studied (Berninger, 2002). One of the claims is that reading is “ really writing ” (actively creating meaning), and writing is “ really reading ” (passively finding what culture and history have inscribed in our heads), and taught as flip sides of the coin—as opposites; “ readers decoded or deciphered language and writers encoded or produced written language ” (p. 46).

What Is the Reading/Writing Connection?

The connection between reading and writing can help solidify these skills in young readers. Parents and teachers should help children “ sound out ” words in both their reading and writing. When a child comes to a word in their reading that is unfamiliar, the adult(s) working with her can model or guide her in sounding out the word using knowledge of phonemes (sound “ chunks ”).
